INTRODUCTION

ABOUT

I am an architect working where heritage meets everyday city life: recording historic buildings with care, and finding new purposes for them.

I trained at Khulna University in Bangladesh and spent more than three years in practice in Dhaka and Chattogram, taking projects from first concept through working drawings to the building site, from a community library in Rajshahi to a fourteen-storey residential building.

In 2022 I moved to Germany to study Architectural and Cultural Heritage at Anhalt University of Applied Sciences. My Master's thesis explored how Berlin's war-damaged buildings can be adapted to a changing city, and my studies of timber-frame construction and historic monuments have shaped a way of working built on survey, careful analysis and minimal intervention.

I believe historic buildings should not only be preserved, but lived in. The projects in this portfolio reflect that belief.
